

Our Indigenous Relations program.

TC Energy's relationship with Indigenous Peoples is founded on respect. Respect for the distinct history, cultures and legal status of Indigenous Peoples and their unique relationship to the land. This, combined with responsiveness to community interests, is the basis upon which TC Energy has built enduring relationships that support community needs and our business objectives.

We seek to involve Indigenous groups in all aspects of project development, as well as contribute to the long-term aspirations of Indigenous Peoples through community legacy, capacity building, contracting and employment opportunities and project participation.

TC Energy tailors its engagement activities to the nature, scope and location of each project and the individual concerns and interests of each Indigenous group.

Commitment of resources to enable early project review supports fair, inclusive participation. We recognize traditional knowledge as integral to informing project planning and mitigation strategies.

We are committed to meaningful engagement with Indigenous groups.

TC Energy's Indigenous Relations strategy.

Engaging Indigenous groups

TC Energy believes mutual success is anchored in relationships based on trust and respect. It's what we do every day. We demonstrate trustworthiness through our actions.

Community legacy

We conduct ourselves as partners committed to forging collaborations that result in lasting, positive change for both the company and Indigenous group.

People and contracting

We bring value to our relationships with Indigenous groups through project-specific and long-term career and business opportunities.

Project participation

Participation agreements are one way we work with Indigenous groups potentially affected by our activities to acknowledge their unique governance, relationship to the land and legal standing.

To review TC Energy's Indigenous Relations Policy, please visit www.TCEnergy.com